One-Hit Wonders, where Carl Douglas played the song live. Produced and published this song was originally thought of as the B-side of I Want to Give You My All (written by Brooklyn composer Larry Weiss, performed by Carl Douglas). [7] The producer (Biddu) had originally hired Douglas to sing what I wanted to give you my all, but needed something to record on the B side, and he asked Douglas if there were any songs they could use. Douglas chose what Vidu called Kung Fu Fighting, and he didn't take it too seriously and showed some of the things that created the melody for her. [1] After recording side A for more than two hours and stopping for a while, it was quickly recorded with just two shots, as if limiting kung fu fighting to three hours in the last 10 minutes of studio time. [4] According to Bidu, kung fu fighting was only on the B side, so he exaggerated it with 'Huti' and 'Haas' and its effects. It was side B, and who would hear that? Robin Blancheflower, who listened to both songs, suggested kung fu fighting was A-side. [4] After its release, the song began to gain popularity in the club, although no music network was broadcast and sold for the first five weeks. It entered the UK singles chart42 on August 17, 1974 and reached the top on 21 September, three weeks after that. [8] It was then published in the US, and it was equally successful, reaching the top of the Hot 100 list. [1] Singles will eventually sell 11 million records worldwide.
